THE TRAIT BOOK

In the study of human heredity it is necessary, first of all, to study one trait at a time. It is only at an advanced stage of the study that we investigate the association of traits, that is, their linkage. The modern science of heredity indeed seeks as the element of study the "unit character." What are unit characters can, however, be told only by breeding experiments in which the true units reveal themselves as relatively, if not absolutely, constant things. On the one hand, many apparently simple traits, like skin color, are shown by hybridization, or mating of unlike parents, to be complexes of unit characters. On the other hand, many complex mental conditions such as feeble mindness, seem to be largely controlled by a single factor that makes for full mental development. The first step in the resolution of human traits, is a primary rough analysis into fairly simple traits and the second, the study of the hereditary behavior of these traits when the parents differ in respect to them. It is the purpose of this book to afford a list based on such a rough analysis.

Aside from its possible value in the analysis of human heritable characters this list will, it is anticipated, fill two very practical needs. First, it may afford a vocabulary for the use of those who are attempting the analysis of personality. It is hoped that with a sense of the extensiveness of the English vocabulary relating to at least the mental side those who are recording personality will not be satisfied with such terms as "smart," or "defective" or "peculiar." In some cases it may be that no further analysis is possible, but in other cases such terms are used through a lack of appreciation of the content of the situation. In the second place, in the work of indexing data it has been found necessary to adopt a standard list of traits accompanied by a list of code numbers to determine the arrangements of the terms and to abbreviate the work of recording them. The following is the list which is in use at the Eugenics Record Office.

A few remarks are necessary concerning the arrangement of the traits in this list. It was early seen to be desirable to provide a logical and an alphabetical arrangement. It is in the logical arrangement that the code numbers are used and these code numbers are used in the form of a decimal classification. Ten fundamental classes were erected and in each of them the traits were arranged in ten subdivisions and many of these were still further subdivided in like fashion. To allow of expansion all classification divisions are not all utilized. The inclusion of terms in this list does not for a moment imply that it is conceived that they have an important or any hereditary basis; although we have no doubt that there is such a basis in practically all. The logicalness of the classification leaves much to be desired. This is partly due owing to the exigencies of the classification. Where there are eleven groups to be put in ten places it will sometimes be necessary to associate under the same basal number terms which are not properly subdivisions of it. For example, 2 stands for the skeletal system but 2.5 up to 2.9 stands for the muscular system. Similarly 0850 is a group of diseases partly infectious and partly metabolic in origin. As the list grew and new terms were added these had to be put in available vacant spaces and not always in immediate juxtaposition or subordination to the closest relative term already utilized. Despite these limitations it is believed that it will be fairly easy in most cases to find the desired term in the logical list; if not, the alphabetical list will, of course, be utilized.

MARGINAL SIGNS

The direction: "Record" applies to the work of indexing data

* Record all affected persons whenever the condition occurs in two persons of one family.

† Record all affected persons whenever the condition occurs in four persons in the family.

‡ Record all persons who have been twice affected with this disease.

D Do not record the unaffected ancestors of an affected person. Field workers and collaborators should extend pedigrees of this trait back along the "direct line" of ancestry, as far as possible.

R Record birthplace and maiden names of female relatives (as well as male) of affected person or persons with the trait. Field workers and collaborators should extend these pedigrees as far as possible to collateral branches.

CARNEGIE INSTITUTION OF WASHINGTON

Eugenics Record Office, Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, N. Y.

MRS. E. H. HARRIMAN, Founder

CHARLES B. DAVENPORT, Director; H. H. LAUGHLIN, Superintendent

The functions of this office are:

1. To serve eugenical interests in the capacity of repository and clearing house.
2. To build up an analytical index of the inborn traits of American families.
3. To train field workers to gather data of eugenical import.
4. To maintain a field force actually engaged in gathering such data.
5. To co-operate with other institutions and with persons concerned with eugenical study.
6. To investigate the manner of the inheritance of specific human traits.
7. To investigate other eugenical factors, such as (a) mate selection, (b) differential fecundity, (c) differential survival, and (d) differential migration.
8. To advise concerning the eugenical fitness of proposed marriages.
9. To publish results of researches.
